

The new year is fast approaching and Brad and I, desperately awaiting your news and updates, wish the very best for you and those you love. Did I mention that we are desperately awaiting your news and updates?

A digitalized carrier pigeon brought us an update from Lynne (Cohen) Koreman, "I currently run the U.S. sports and entertainment marketing group at global shipper DHL. This summer, I was delighted to throw out a first pitch at Fenway as part of our sponsorship with the Red Sox. What a thrill! At the All Star Game in San Francisco in July, I bumped into John Slusher. I was up in Hanover as part of Tuck's Visiting Executive Program and gave a lecture about service industry marketing. My husband Rob Koreman '92 and I have a daughter, Samantha who is nearly 10. She is absolutely fantastic. We live in South Florida and life is great."

From her law office in Minnesota, we were glad to electronically hear from Adriana (Suringa) Luedke. "John and I are well and keeping very busy. John continues to enjoy his legal work at General Mills, and I am busy with my patent law practice at Dorsey & Whitney in Minneapolis. After a summer full of visits with family and friends, including beaches, lakes, horseback riding, triathlons (for John), etc., we are trying to enjoy the warmth of early fall before it all disappears for about six months. Our daughter Adriana has started second grade, and we are busy trying to keep up with her (yet another full-time job). We also caught up with Rahul Ranadive and his wife Sujata this summer when they came to town for a wedding. They are living in the San Francisco area where Rahul is busy building his international tax law practice."

"Gruessech von der Schweiz!" was how Peter Harvey greeted us in a recent note. I am not sure what it means, but I am hoping it has something to do with our skills as co-class secretary. He writes, "Anna (Cathcart) and I, and our four boys, live mostly in the mountains of Switzerland, where we run educational and outdoor programs. (Dartmouth students and alums often come to work with us!). We're increasingly seeing student applications from children of our Dartmouth contemporaries. Anyone with kids approaching middle school or with an interest in education can look us up at www.hohliebi.ch. We also have our home in Newport, RI, where just found out that Scott Spring has been dropping off his child at the local elementary school across from our house for the past several years. But we have yet to actually see him!"

Finally, from her Hand Analysis HQ in Tucson, Arizona, we were updated on the musings of Beth Davis, "The Hand Analyst". She notes, "I help women entrepreneurs (esp. healers, artists, coaches, consultants) build Life-Purpose Centered businesses that are both meaningful and profitable. This December, I'll be offering my Level 1 Hand Analysis Certification Course in Tucson. To find out more, go to www.handanalyst.com/purposebootcamp.html. Meantime, my oldest step-daughter, Hannah, age 19, is beginning college, while her sister, Julia, age 15, (going on 30), is figuring out how to get a full college scholarship so we'll give her all her college money to open a restaurant...My husband has been making serious inroads in Chinese manufacturing, particularly cables and connectors. He just got back from his second trip to China this year. Hey, fellow 90s... drop me a line... beth@handanalyst.com"

If you get to Boston, let me know, the drinks will be on me.
